² I have little to include in this and the following sections, as I do not have a traditional academic career history and have developed a consultancy profile as a maritime law expert in the trade. This is very attractive to universities (such as City University, Bologna University, Italy) offering international trade and maritime law subject, as those studying these subjects must understand both the jurisprudence of the law and the commercial context in which the law exists- “commercial law and commercial practice going hand in hand”, so to speak. Thus, although I lecture at academic conferences (e.g. for Marmara University, Istanbul, Turkey, these are not published papers and my writing has been for commercial organisations and for trade publications.
